

CAREER WISDOM
INSTITUTE

Introduction

"Sometimes, people ask, 'Do you think I'll make it?' Have faith in yourself. Yes, you will make it. Why shouldn't you make it? Did someone sign a certificate saying you will never make it? Surely, you can make it. One of the things to remember is if God has given birth to you, then that is a sure sign you can make it. He has sent you to this world with so much faith. So, if you can have even a little bit of that faith, you will reach the goal."

Swami Chidvilasananda

Staying employed these days is an Inside Job.

What does that mean?

It means that you are the sole creator of your professional work-life experience.

It means knowing and understanding what is unique about you—your given gift—and taking that out into the world. This is your job and will keep you employed and resilient in any circumstances.

An Inside Job means that you no longer rely on the bankrupt industrial revolution and you join the entrepreneurial age. This doesn't necessarily mean working for yourself. It does mean that you go to work from a new, creative perspective.

An Inside Job means never looking online for a job again. You can research companies and potential clients online for information, but stay away from job boards and classified ads. When you work from the inside out, you are led to countless opportunities. You follow the excitement that builds when you see something that aligns with who you are and pursue that like a bloodhound looking for a lost child.

Inside Job means there is no limit to the abundance available because you love what you do. There is a belief in our culture called the work ethic, which teaches us that it is okay to suffer through what we are doing 40 hours a week, 52 weeks a year. The irony of this belief is that you actually limit yourself and the amount of money you make if you dislike your work. It's criminal to put your soul, spirit, and body through something that painful every day and think it is okay. That's like living in an abusive relationship and thinking that's the way love is supposed to feel. When you work from the inside out, there is no limit to how much money you can make because you are doing what you were born to do. You have been given everything you need to be successful. You just need to access what you already possess. The Career Wisdom Institute, Inc. and this book present a new model for career development and success, one that is dedicated to you finding work that is inspired from the inside out.

CAREER WISDOM
INSTITUTE

This is the age of self-determination, and the only job you will ever need is the Inside Job, living your design, and loving your work.